- Awards are unlikely to be greater than $10,000 and most are closer to $5,000 – so please make your request reasonable given those guidelines.

What criteria do you use in reviewing proposals?

Determining whether or not to fund a project or program is an art not a science. We are prayerful in our process and try hard to be consistent and transparent in our deliberations. The questions listed below show you some of what we take into consideration as we review grant applications. While this is not an exhaustive list please take these questions into consideration as you prepare your application.

- A. Is this a project where a small amount of money might make a big impact?
- B. Is this project seeking “seed money” to launch a new initiative?
- C. Do the applicants have sufficient capacity to carry out their project?
- D. Do the applicants have a plan for sustainability for their project?
- E. Will a grant from MCGF increase their capacity to raise additional funds?
- F. Is this project being done in partnership to increase reach and impact?
- G. Does this organization have people of color in leadership positions, benefit people of color or the disadvantaged?
